The Holy League.

A Russian correspondent sends the Herald the following account of the abolition of the Holy League: It was started soon after the assassination of Alexander II., at the initiative of noblemen of high standing, who issued an appeal to a number of well-known men who could be relied upon to jom in the work. The idea was to fight the Nihilists with the latter's own weapons, save that the bombs and dynamite were HOW THE CZAR-PROTECTING ASSOCIATION CAME to jom in the work. The idea was to fight the Nihilists with the latter's own weapons, save that the bombs and dynamite were to be discussed, though prisons and administrative deportation might be put in use. Those last extreme means of conversion were, however, to be used in exceptional cases, and even without the knowledge of the majority of the members of the Holy League, who were mostly honorable men, holding administrative abuses in very much the same horror as they did the Nihilistic deeds. It was preposed to entice the vacillating members of society, and even former Nihilists, to enter into communication with the Holy League on the promise of the latter to help them get employment or even give them the means to leave the country in case the police should make it too hot for them in Russia. Declarations and invitations to that effect were distributed in great numbers, but with great discrimination, and all written communications were requested to be directed poste restante to Mr. N. I. Kiedus. For some time the affairs of the League were prospering. There is no statement, of course, as to the number of Kiedus. For some time the affairs of the League were prospering. There is no statement, of course, as to the number of "conversions" achieved by the Holy League, but its financial condition was brilliant, since many of its members, who were mostly rich and influential men, subscribed large sums to the maintenance of the League. It is even stated on good authority that Prince Demidoff, of San Donato, has at different times given Donato, has at different times given to the League, of which he was a member, no less than half a million rubles. The Government is known to have spent over three million rubles on the Holy League during the eighteen months of its demands of the other Ministers.

Most of all were annoyed by the League the Minister of Justice, Mr. Nabokoff, and the Minister of the interior, Count Tolstoy. Different means were resorted to in order to destroy the League. It was more than once attempted to prejudice the Czar against it by representing to him that the League was aiming at establishing a kind of oligarchy over the country, overshadowing even the person of the sovereign. But all such insinuations were counteracted by some men who were much trusted by the Czar, as Count Voroniz-Dashkof, Minister of the Court, and others. At last Count Tolstoy directed a powerful blow at the League and killed it outright. It came about in this way. There exists a new paper in St. Petersburg called the New Times, edited by A. S. Souvorin, a devoted servant of Count Tolstoy, who, in recognition of his constant laudations of the Government, received for years the handsome annual subsidy of 28,000 rubles from the Ministry subsidy of 28,000 rubles from the Maintay of the Interior. In his determination to annihilate the League Count Tolstoy ordered Mr. Souverin to publish in his paper a ed Mr. Souverin to publish in his paper a ed Mr. Souvering of the Holy League, satirical description of the Holy League, was about taking his leave. It need hardly was about taking his leave. It need hardly Minilists. Until then the gagged press of Russia never uttered a word about the ex-istence of the Holy League, though its activity was well known and much commented upon. Now, at the order of Count
Tolstoy, Souvorin published the desired article, explaining even that the person to whom the Leaguers directed all written communications to be sent—Mr. N. I. Kiedus—was no other than the chief of the secret police of the Empire, Sudcikin, whose name was only spelled backwards, with initials made out of the last two their ministries very much in the light of personal estates, where they can do as they please without any consideration as to the general exigencies of the Empire or the

When this article appeared it threw such when this article appeared a threw stead a heap of ridicule upon the Leaguers that it was generally expected that the latter would immediately destroy the New Times and its editor. But here Count Tolstoy outwitted the Leaguers again. He hur-ried to Gatchina and explained to the Emperor that Souverin meant no mischief, but tried to counteract some foolish rumors current in public by explaining the true aims of the League. In view of the public ridicule nothing was to be done but to put an end to the League by publishing an im-perial ukase abolishing "all secret societies in the Empire." Count Tolstoy has tri-umphed this time again, and the subsidy of the editor of the New Times has been increased to 60,000 rubles a year.

Queer Coincidences.

Ifrom the Whitehall Review, December 14th.]

Mr. Browning came back from Italy in the autumn with a curious story of coincidences. The story is divided dramatically into two parts, whereof the first was enacted late in the summer of last year, acted late in the summer of last year, [From the Whitehall Review, December 14th.] acted late in the summer of last year, when Mr. Browning found himself neted late in the summer of last year, when Mr. Browning found himself with his sister in a remote Swiss valley on the confines of Italy. Strolling about in the evening while dinner was preparing, they paused, before going in, to admire the caim and repose of the valley that lay stretched before them, when their talk suddenly turned to the Subject of murder, and each began to speculate on what their conduct would be if they should be so unfortunate as to find a body. I say reference for it is well bears, the interpretation of the subject of murder, and each began to speculate on what their conduct would be if they should be so unfortunate as to find a body. I say reference for it is well bears. be so unfortunate as to find a body. I say unfortunate, for it is well known that in France, Switzerland, and Italy the pre-An' I'll show you mighty quick how to clam tree!" France, Switzerland, and Haly the pre-sumption of innocence is most strongly against the person lighting on a corpse, in-against the person lighting on a corpse, in-stead of, as in our law, the presumption stead of, as in our law, the presumption of "Cause 1'2" fraid you gwine to be hobbykew!" being in his favor. They could hardly settle as to whether they should or should not give information to the authorities, and so escape the annoyance of being detained on their journey, when they found themselves at their inn-door and dinner ready. The next morning, as they were about to resume their travels, the landlored attended with a long face to inform the poet that it would be impossible to have the two horses for his carriage, as one was wanted to bring in the body of a man found murdered early that morning at the head of the valley. Questioning him, Mr. Browning found that in all likelihood the murder had been committed after the conversation of the evening before, and that the body had been found by a man digging potatoes just about the spot where his sister and he had stood discussing the probabilities of their conduct in case such an event should occur. Part one ends on the denarting of the travellers helpful the one of the probabilities of their conduct in case such an event should occur. Part one ends on the denarting of the travellers helpful the one. being in his favor. They could hardly set-tle as to whether they should or should not event should occur. Part one ends on the departure of the travellers behind the one departure of the travellers behind the one horse; part two opens in the autumn of this year, when Mr. Browning paid another visit to the remote Swiss valley, again in company with his sister. Remembering the incident of last year, they asked the laudlord if the murderer had ever been discovered, when he told them no; that the man suspected (who had found the body) had thrown himself out of his prison window, unable to bear the thought of a trial and the possibility of his wife and children in want, and had had ever been discovered, when he told them no; that the man suspected (who had found the body) had thrown himself out of his prison window, unable to bear the thought of a trial and the possibility of his wile and children in want, and had since didet; and that it was supposed the murdered man, an Italian, had been stabbed in a quarrel by his companions, who had escaped over the frontier. Further, as on the previous year, dinner preparing, he took them to the spot where the body was discovered, and they found themselves standing exactly where on the very evening of the crime they had speculated as to what they should do in case of such an event. To beginten the dramatic effect of the coincidence, they learned that no crime of violence had been committed in the valley for the last hundred years. A gentleman present when this story was told capped it with one of a yet more curlous chain of coincidences. He was a good supply on hand of both MULES AND HORSE AND JOB WORK NEATLY statistically or no sale.
